Dossier:
The Serbian Volunteer Guard
Dossiers are the product of HLC research on possible perpetrators of war crimes committed during the wars of the 1990s on the soil of the former Yugoslavia. Dossiers aim to present to the general public evidence and information on mass crimes whose perpetrators have not been brought to justice. Dossiers urge government institutions to prosecute all those responsible for war crimes, either as perpetrators, order-givers or on the basis of command responsibility, in order to establish the rule of law and deal with the violent past in post-Yugoslav states.

Introduction

The crimes committed by the Serbian Volunteer Guard (SDG/the Guard), a group formed by Željko Ražnatović (Arkan), and its links with the Serbian police, military and political establishment, were an integral part of the indictments of the ICTY’s Office of the Prosecutor against Slobodan Milošević, Goran Hadžić, Jovica Stanišić and Franko Simatović.

The trials of Milošević and Hadžić were terminated because they had died before the judgments were passed, but witness statements and evidence presented during the trials contain a wealth of materials about the activities of the SDG. In addition, the ICTY’s Office of the Prosecutor filed an indictment against SDG commander Željko Ražnatović aka Arkan for crimes committed in the area of Sanski Most. In the trial judgment following the retrial of Stanišić and Simatović, the Trial Chamber of the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals (MICT) established that the SDG was involved in murders, persecution and forced displacement in the area of the so-called Serbian Autonomous Region of Slavonia, Baranja and Western Srem (SAO SBZS) in 1991 and 1992, in Bijeljina and Zvornik in 1992, and in Sanski Most in 1995. Nevertheless, not a single member of the SDG has been prosecuted for these crimes to date.

The Dossier presents facts about the SDG from its establishment in 1990 to its official disbanding in 1996. The first part of the Dossier deals with the origin of the SDG, its structure, and the main characteristics of its operation and cooperation with other units. Further in the Dossier, evidence is presented of the SDG’s involvement in crimes committed in Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH). After looking at the role of the SDG in sending forcibly mobilized refugees to the front line and lootings, the disbanding of the Guard is discussed. The annexes contain a list of 189 members of the SDG that the HLC has managed to identify in its research.

The SDG had been present in Croatia in the area of eastern Slavonia and Baranja from June 1991. In the spring of 1992, it was active in eastern Bosnia and the wider Sarajevo area. In late January 1993, the SDG was present in northern Dalmatia and Lika. The following year, 1994, parts of the Guard returned to Bosnia and Herzegovina to take part in “Operation Pauk” [Spider] in Cazin Krajina, where they remained until August 1995, while a number of members of the SDG took part in the Trnovo/Treskavica operation in June and July 1995. In autumn 1995, the SDG was present in the areas of Sanski Most, Ključ and Prijedor.

The Dossier is based on publicly available military and police documents that have been admitted as evidence before the ICTY, the facts established in judgments, a large number of witness statements and testimonies before the ICTY, including the testimonies of former members of the SDG, as well as media reports and witness statements gathered by HLC researchers.
The Serbian Volunteer Guard in outline

The Serbian Volunteer Guard (SDG), also known as “Arkan’s Tigers” and “Arkan’s Men”, was founded on 11 October 1990 at the Pokajnica [Repentance] Monastery in Serbia.¹

At the founding ceremony, the SDG members – Željko Ražnatović aka “Arkan” as the SDG founder and commander, Nebojša Đorđević, nicknamed “Šuca”, Nenad Marković, nicknamed “Šicko”, Saša Pavlović aka “Crveno”, Dragan Petrović, nicknamed “Kajman”, Stojan Novaković, nicknamed “Cope”, Branislav Zeljković, nicknamed “Zelja”, Šaleta Vukotić, Zoran Petrović, nicknamed “Zonja”, and 17 more volunteers mostly from the fanbase of Belgrade’s Red Star football team – took an oath of allegiance.²

This is the wording of the guardsman oath: “May any man who is a Serb, of Serbian birth, of Serbian blood and lineage, but does not come to fight to defend Serbdom, never have progeny, male or female, may his all endeavours bear no fruit, be it in winemaking or in growing fine wheat. May nothing that is his be blessed in the name of the Cross and may he rot in the lifetime of his own generation. An honourable fight should change the blood of all future generations. I make my oath to the Holy Cross, with three fingers, that I will lay down my life to save Serbdom.”³

³ In addition to the oath, the SDG also had a prayer for its members to say before going into battle: “Son of God! You gave your soul to save us. You also commanded us to give our souls for our comrades. I am joyfully going to fulfil Your holy will, fighting for the Fatherland and my Faith. Arm me with strength and courage to resist our enemies. If it be Your will that I lay down my life in today’s battle, mercifully allow me to die with firm faith and hope for a life of eternal bliss in Your Heavenly Kingdom. Mother of God, protect us under Your veil. Amen.”, source: SDG ad in Politika, 9 October 1994; The motto of the SDG troops was: “When I am in front of you, follow me, if I step back, kill me, if I die, avenge me”, see in: “Lovci na jelene” [“Deer Hunters”], Intervju, 24 January 1992, exhibit P446.55, Milošević.
The SDG numbered about 300 active volunteers, including women, mostly from Serbia but also volunteers from Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. Between 4,000 and 5,000 volunteers were part of the SDG at some point, from its inception until its disbandment in 1996. Many of them had a criminal record.

The headquarters of the SDG was located in Belgrade, in the house of Željko Ražnatović (Arkan) at Ljutice Bogdana no. 3. In September 1991, they established their base and the Volunteer Training Centre in Erdut (Croatia), in the building of the pre-war JNA Centre for Military Training. The SDG Volunteer Training Centre was operational until March 1994, when the SDG withdrew from the Baranja area for a year and left the centre to the Krajina Militia.

When going to the front line, members of the SDG carried with them only the unit identity card, modelled after military identity cards, containing the name, picture and blood type. The ID card read as follows: “The Serbian Volunteer Guard is a Serbian army founded to defend Serbian hearths and homes, Serbian mothers and Serbian children. It is a non-partisan army, created to help and defend Serbs wherever they are in the country and abroad. The SDG’s task is to preserve Serbdom, and the Serbian Orthodox Faith, Serbian family and Serbian unity.”

Volunteer and TO training centre in SAO Slavonia, Baranja and Western Srem

The official name of the SDG Volunteer Training Centre was the Centre for special training of volunteers and Territorial Defence Force (TO) in SAO Slavonia, Baranja, and Western Srem, or the 101st Training Centre Erdut.12

The Centre was established on 21 September 1991, when the President of the self-proclaimed SAO SBZS Government, Goran Hadžić, appointed Željko Ražnatović, the commander of the special TO units of SAO Slavonia, Baranja and Western Srem at the time, as commander of the TO Centre in Erdut.13

The Centre was originally within the area of responsibility of the 12th Corps of the JNA, and after the formation of the Serbian Army of Krajina (SVK), in the area of responsibility of the 11th Corps. The Centre’s APO address was 9189-9.14

The Centre was about 300 metres away from the River Danube, and consisted of a dormitory, a classroom, a communal space, a kitchen block with a dining room and a canteen, a storage area for weapons and equipment, a space for training aids and an auxiliary space.15 Large quantities of various types of infantry weapons, grenade launchers, hand grenades and hand-held rocket launchers were stored in the warehouse.16 The Centre could accommodate up to 260 people.17

Between February and April 1992, Marko Pejić, nicknamed “Peja” and Mihajlo Ulemek, known by the nicknames “Mile” and “Puki”,18 were the commanders of the Erdut Centre. Nikola Vučković was in charge of security.19 Around ten women from Erdut were employed at the Centre.20

In the second half of March 1994, the MUP of the RSK took over the Centre and the SDG was temporarily disbanded. Some SDG members were employed by Željko Ražnatović Arkan in his businesses in Serbia, some began working as bodyguards of important persons, while volunteers from Bosnia and Herzegovina were assigned to the VRS East Bosnian Corps, mainly to the “Panthers Guard”. Some of the SDG members were remobilised in November 1994 and deployed to the area of Cazin Krajin. The SDG returned to the Erdut area in May 1995 and established a new training centre, to which forcibly mobilised refugees were brought from Serbia.21

The new centre was located closer to the Danube, in the area with holiday homes in Žarkovac, which served as a training ground. SDG officers occupied abandoned holiday homes closer to the road leading to the Bogojevo bridge, while members of the labour unit were accommodated in large military tents in the centre compound.22 Arkan set up his headquarters in the 1001 Noć [1001 Nights] Restaurant with rooms in Erdut. SDG generals Marko Pejić, Mihajlo Ulemek and Major Mladen Šarac also installed themselves at the 1001 Noć. The restaurant had a terrace where Arkan kept a tamed tiger which became the SDG’s mascot.23

In addition to the training centre, Arkan had a petrol station in Erdut, which included a duty-free shop and a cafe. They were managed by Đorđe Opsenica. The petrol station had an underground warehouse, where the SDG kept large quantities of cigarettes, food, uniforms, and stolen vehicles. The warehouse was managed by Dalibor Vuković. There was a guard post called Kec in front of the petrol station, where the guard was changed every six hours.24

Strict discipline was maintained at the centre. Those who breached the discipline were confined for several days in makeshift prison cells, or physically punished – given 25 blows with a baton called “Ustasha One”, made to carry a 23-kg. rock around with the words “Mr Discipline” written on it, or tied to the mast. SDG members were not allowed to leave the centre without the approval of their superiors, or to consume alcohol.25

The Centre also served as a detention facility for the non-Serb population from the Erdut area.26

The training

The first group of SDG were trained by members of the Special Counter-Terrorist Unit (SAJ) of the Serbian Ministry of the Interior (MUP). The training groups consisted of 50 to 60 fighters, with the most talented members receiving special training. Once a group of SDG fighters had completed the training, they would become instructors and train new recruits.27 Instructors were Milorad Ulemek aka “Legija”, Borislav Pelević, Nenad Bujošević aka “Rambo”, and Zoran Mačai, nicknamed “Mačak” [Cat].28

The training consisted of running and martial arts, as well as training on how to move on the battlefield, how to use firearms and explosives, how to handle mines, and first-aid training.29

SDG composition, weaponry, and equipment

The SDG consisted of three companies comprising the following platoons, units and specialities:

- Specials
- Reconnaissance
- Military police unit (formed as ad hoc units before each action)
- Communication
- Tank operators
- Artillerymen
- Labour unit (known as “partisans”)

Ranks were not only awarded to active members of the SDG, but were also awarded as a status symbol to wealthy businessmen who provided financial support to the Guard. SDG members wore two types of uniforms – NATO-style camouflage uniforms for daytime operations and black uniforms for night operations. The officers wore black berets, and later red berets, and the soldiers wore green berets with SDG insignia. With black uniforms, the soldiers wore balaclavas. Radio operators and tank operators wore green one-piece suits. Members of the labour unit wore olive-grey uniforms like ordinary soldiers, but without insignia. On the left shoulder they wore a patch with an open-jawed orange tiger, and on the right shoulder the SDG insignia. In accordance with the Vance Plan to demobilize the RSK TO, in the spring of 1992 the SDG temporarily replaced their military uniforms with two-piece blue police uniforms and officially became part of the Krajina Militia, and the Erdut Centre was renamed the Centre for Training of Special Forces of the Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Srem Militia.

When joining the SDG, volunteers signed a three-month, six-month or twelve-month contract. Although they were not given regular salaries, they were paid 300-400 German marks per month for participating in actions, while SDG officers received about 1,000 German marks per month.38 During the Trnovo/Treskavica, Pauk [Spider] and Banja Luka operations in 1994 and 1995, members of the SDG were paid by the RDB of the Serbian MUP.39 In addition to that, during “Operation Pauk”, SDG members received payments from Fikret Abdić.40

The SDG received weapons, ammunition and equipment from the Serbian Ministry of the Interior, the JNA and the Serbian Ministry of Defence, as well as from various state-owned and private companies.41 At the beginning of the war, they only had automatic rifles. The soldiers had PKT-84 machine guns, and the officers were armed with AK-47 assault rifles and Heckler und Koch automatic guns with silencers. They also had snipers with night-vision sights.42 They received hand-held rocket launchers from the JNA. Their first tanks were those they captured in actions around Vukovar.43

As for the vehicles, they had Mitsubishi Pajero, Nissan and Mercedes off-road vehicles, painted black with a tiger emblem on the front and an SDG insignia on the door. In addition, they had two five- or six-seater vehicles, two vans and three trucks.44 They would also hijack off-road vehicles, mostly from UNPROFOR, and repaint them.45 In Erdut, the SDG used special vehicle registration plates beginning with 900, provided by Milan Milanović, nicknamed “Mrgud”, Assistant Minister of Defence of the RSK.46

After the signing of the Vance Plan, they used the blue number plates of the Krajina Militia.\(^47\) Some SDG vehicles had number plates of the Federal or Serbian Ministry of the Interior and Yugoslav Army.\(^48\)

Members of the SDG used codes in their telephone communication with one another, and important facilities were also given code names. Arkan’s wartime code was 99, Legija’s was Tiger 1, Mihajlo Ulemek’s 66, Borislav Pelević’s Tiger 22, Party Headquarters’ 01, Arkan’s house’s 05, the vehicle fleet’s Bravo 12, the Obilić stadium’s Bravo 14, Arkan’s residence’s Bravo 15, the Zvezdara communication centre’s Bravo 18.\(^49\) Members of the SDG addressed Ražnatović as commander, and in less formal situations they called him Tata [Dad].\(^50\)

If a member of the SDG got seriously wounded, he would be admitted to the VMA (Military Medical Academy) or to a civilian hospital, and the costs of treatment were covered by the Serbian Ministry of the Interior through the RDB, who stamped the medical card of the wounded fighter “member of army reserve”.\(^51\)

Tigers and Super Tigers

After the return of the SDG from Benkovac in the spring of 1993, the “Super Tigers”, an elite sabotage SDG unit was formed. The Super Tigers unit was made up of experienced fighters, who enjoyed a privileged status and had special identity documents.\(^52\) Their official name was Special Operations Platoon and their commander was Milorad Ulemek aka Legija, who joined the SDG in April 1992, after deserting from the French Foreign Legion.\(^53\) Legija’s deputy was Nenad Bujošević aka Rambo.\(^54\)

The Super Tigers wore black berets, black military caps or wool combat caps. Ulemek introduced black uniforms, special commands and rituals, and a special vow called “The Tiger’s Word”, modelled on French Foreign Legion traditions. Their tiger insignia was also different from the insignia worn by ordinary Tigers. They did not have to attend musters or flag-raising ceremonies. Unlike ordinary Tigers, they were allowed to consume alcohol.

Cooperation with other armed forces

For the purpose of conducting combat operations, the SDG cooperated with or was resubordinated to the JNA, SVK, VRS, RSK MUP and RS MUP.

General Andrija Biorčević, describing the role of the SDG in military operations around Vukovar, stated as follows: “That was the biggest contribution of Arkan’s volunteers... [W]e would surround a village, Arkan’s volunteers would enter it and kill those who refused to surrender, and we would go on.” According to a report from security organs, SDG members would start their operations late in the evening. They would enter Croat houses, question Croats and, if they “did not like what they were saying, cut their ears or otherwise mutilate people.”

In early October 1991, the SDG found itself surrounded by enemy from all directions in Vukovar. To help them, Slobodan Milošević ordered the then Serbian Defence Minister General Tomislav Simović to contact the Air Force, in order to have JNA fighter jets fly over Vukovar to help the Guard get out of the predicament.

In the second half of April 1993, Milorad Ulemek aka Legija and another member of the SDG stayed at the 413th Training Centre of VJ Armoured-Mechanised Units in Vršac, in order to make preparations and arrangements for the training of 50 SDG volunteers. The volunteers were to be trained on how to drive tanks and transporters, how to guide anti-tank missiles, and how to fire tank guns. On 6 May 1993, 50 members of the SDG came to the Training Centre, where they were received by its commander, Colonel Radovan Tačić. The volunteers were sent to the shooting range in the village of Orešac. The following day, the Commander of the 1st Army, Lieutenant-General Vladimir Stojanović, forbade anyone from the 413th Training Centre to take part in the training of members of the SDG. In the evening of 7 May 1993, SDG members left Orešac.62

Although it cooperated with regular army forces, the SDG often clashed with them over disarmament, arrest, mistreatment and abuse of officers and soldiers.63 In a 1994 interview, Arkan spoke about the mistreatment of the fighters and commanders of the SVK: “[A] conflict arose, because I... and my officers caught some commanders down there, the so-called commanders of the Army of the Republic of Srpska Krajina, deserting. And, normally, they got roughed up. How to punish them - we punished them with beatings. Because we had a strict regime in the Serbian Volunteer Guard - 25 blows to the buttocks for drunkenness, like the old Serbian Army did. And, normally, nobody liked deserters, let alone when you catch a captain or major deserting and leaving the unit to disintegrate. [...] My army - 550 people - captures deserters, puts them in a unit and sends them to a desolate place to defend, normally, our command[.]”64 In the autumn of 1995, Željko Ražnatović beat up Colonel Svetozar Andrić, Chief of the Drina Corps Staff.65

The Serbian Volunteer Guard in Croatia

The SDG had been present in Croatia since July 1991, when Željko Ražnatović aka Arkan with about six other armed men crossed into Croatia near Vajska in civilian Mitsubishi Pajero vehicles, with the signed permission of Radmilo Bogdanović.66 From August 1991 to December 1991, the Tigers participated in the takeover of villages in the area of Eastern Slavonia and Baranja.

66 Radmilo Bogdanović was the Minister of the Interior of the Republic of Serbia until May 1991, when he resigned in response to public outcry over the excessive use of police force during the 9 March 1991 protests. In late June 1991, he was appointed a member of the Committee for Relations with Serbs in Diaspora and the Defence and Security Committee of the National Assembly of the Republic of Serbia, see in: Decision amending the decision on dismissal and appointment of members of the National Assembly of the Republic of Serbia committees, exhibit 2D00738, Stanišić & Simatović; Nebojša Bogunović, witness statement in Stanišić & Simatović, ICTY, 16 August 2011, pp. 13189-13190.
Upon arrival in Croatia, the SDG operated north of the River Vuka, in the area of responsibility of the JNA 12th Corps, familiarly known as the Novi Sad Corps. The area covered Borovo Selo, Borovo Naselje, Erdut, Bobota and other places. The SDG first fought in Tenja near Osijek and had its headquarters in this town, in Zagrebačka Street, until September 1991, and its training ground in the nearby village of Ćelije.

Since the end of the summer of 1991, the SDG had participated in the takeover of Deletovci, Nijemci, Bršadin, Aljmaš, Šodolovci, Ernestinovo, Lužac and Vukovar, together with the JNA and other units.

In early September, the 1st Mechanised Company (1st MC) of the 2nd Mechanised Battalion (2nd MB) of the 51st Mechanised Brigade (51st MBr) of the JNA took the village of Aljmaš in Baranja, which was mostly deserted at the time. The following day, SDG members blew up the Catholic Church of Our Lady of Refuge with explosives, severely damaging it. SDG members also mined the Church of All Saints in Erdut, which had been damaged during the capture of Erdut.

Towards the end of March 1992, several SDG soldiers, including Borislav Pelević, were sent to Dalmatia to provide security to the Krka Monastery, and stayed there for about a month.

During the takeover of Vukovar, the SDG was formally resubordinated to the Operational Group (OG) North, which was initially commanded by General Mladen Bratić, Commander of the Novi Sad Corps. After Bratić’s death in the first half of November 1991, General Andrija Biorčević, with whom Ražnatović maintained a close relationship, was appointed the Commander of the OG North.

On 23 November 1991, Biorčević awarded Željko Ražnatović a machine gun as a war trophy for his participation in the battles in Borovo. In 1994, the SDG awarded a Miloš Obilić medal to General Biorčević in response.
Ražnatović also had close cooperation with local politicians in this area, which resulted in the initiative of the Local Community of the village of Bapska on 11 February 1992 to rename the village Arkanovo [Arkan’s Village].

Laslovo

The SDG took part in the attack on the village of Laslovo alongside the TO, JNA and various volunteer groups.

Early on the morning on 4 September 1991, two members of the SDG were killed during the attack on Laslovo and two others were killed after being captured. That same day, a group of Serbian TO fighters captured four members of the Croatian National Guard (ZNG) and turned them over to Major Ljubomir Veljković, Commander of the 2nd Armoured Battalion of the JNA 12th Proletarian Mechanised Brigade. Željko Ražnatović took the prisoners from the JNA and offered them to the Croatian side in exchange for the fallen SDG fighters, but the Croatian side refused the offer. In the evening of 4 September 1991, Arkan and several members of the SDG took captive Croatian soldiers – Josip Albert (b.1948), Stjepan/Stevo Ember (b.1960), Vlado Kuprešak (b.1957) and Stjepan Kovač (b.1948) – to the cemetery in Ćelije, and killed them there. The next day, they covered their bodies with earth with the help of an excavator. Soon after, Ražnatović captured a Roman Catholic priest and four nuns in Tenja and exchanged them for the bodies of the SDG fighters.

After the capture and killing of the SDG fighters in Laslovo, Ražnatović repeatedly emphasised that the SDG would no longer take prisoners but kill “every soldier of the occupiers”. As he put it, “we will execute them with honour and I can state here that, now that my two soldiers have been tortured, the SDG will no longer hold any Ustasha and Black Legion soldiers as prisoners.”

Following the capture of Dalj, the TO force under the command of Pavle Milovanović, nicknamed “Paja”, established a detention facility in the auxiliary rooms of the police station in Dalj, to which Croatian civilians were brought in early August 1991. Most Croatian civilians had fled the area at the beginning of the attack, but several hundred of those who did not manage to escape ended up in detention. Milorad Stričević, head of security at the Dalj TO headquarters, who referred to himself as a colonel close to the SDG, was in charge of the interrogation of detainees. Stričević and his assistants Branko Gojsović and Đorđe Milovanović, nicknamed “Đordila”, from the so-called “Space Police” of the Dalj TO, would take non-Serb residents of Dalj to the detention facility, interrogate and mistreat them. Detention facility guards, including members of the TO and reservists from Prigrevica, beat and tortured detainees. Arkan also visited the facility and detainees were beaten with a metal chair in his presence. On multiple occasions, Željko Ražnatović and members of the SDG took detainees out of the detention centre in Dalj, of which the Provincial SUP of Vojvodina was aware.

The first group of detainees were taken away on 21 September 1991 at about 18.00 hours. Goran Hadžić and Željko Ražnatović came to the detention centre in the company of twenty-odd armed persons and asked for two detainees – Slavko Palinkaš from Aljmaš and Luka Šutalo from Erdut. Both men were handed over to them. After that, 11 more detainees were taken away by members of the 83 As early as 15 October 1991, the Vojvodina Province Secretariat of Internal Affairs (SUP) – DB Department, had information about the SDG taking away and killing prisoners, see – Information, SDB Department, Vojvodina Province Secretariat of Internal Affairs (SUP), 15 October 1991, exhibit P00334, Stanišić & Simatović; Two days later, the SDB Department of the Vojvodina SUP reported that about 300 members of the Dalj TO had protested about the situation in Dalj, against arbitrary arrests and torture of captives, and mistreatment of local Serbs. Arkan spoke to members of the Dalj TO saying that he had killed the captives from Dalj, adding “only the manner of their liquidation may be disputable, nothing else”, see in Information, SDB Department, Vojvodina Province SUP, 15 October 1991, exhibit P00335, Stanišić & Simatović.

Two days later, the commander of the police station in Dalj made an official note with the names of the detainees who had been taken away: Ivan Zelember (b. 1934), Zoran Anđel (b.1967), Čedomir Predojević (b.1954), Dražen Štimec (b.1970), Željko Filipčić (b.1966), Darko Kušić (b.1968), Ivan Forjan (b.1951), Pavao Zemljak (b.1934), Vladimir Zemljak (b.1967), and Haso Brajić (b.1933).

These detainees were taken away and killed at an unknown location. The remains of ten of the victims were exhumed from a mass grave in the village of Ćelije on 23 February 1998. An autopsy determined gunshot wounds or wounds caused by explosives as the cause of their death.

The body of Pavle Beck (b.1957), another man who was taken from the police station in Dalj by members of the SDG and killed at an unknown location in October 1991, was found in a well in the Dalj area in October 1998.

A second group of detained civilians was taken away from Dalj prison on the night of 4-5 October 1991. On 4 October at about 21.00 hours, Milorad Stričević came to the police station in Dalj together with Dragoljub Trbić, Đorđe Milovanović, Branko Gojsović and another unidentified older man. They immediately began interrogating the detainees. At about 23.45 hours, Željko Ražnatović arrived with twenty of his men in a TAM military truck, a Pinzgauer and a van. Ražnatović entered the station, while his men stayed outside, guns at the ready. He introduced himself as the TO commander and said he wanted to see Milorad Stričević, after which he and five other men entered the room where Stričević was. Dragoljub Trbić, Đorđe Milovanović, Branko Gojsović and the unidentified older man then left the room, and Stričević and members of the SDG brought the detainees in for questioning.

During the questioning, the words, “Come on you guardsman and policemen!” and the sound of an object hitting the table could be heard from the room. At around 00.40 hours, three detainees carried 12 bodies out of the room and loaded them onto a truck, after which they were also forced onto the truck. The truck carrying the bodies and three detainees was then driven away by Stričević and his men in an unknown direction. After a while, Ražnatović returned with his soldiers to the police station to check whether the rooms had been cleaned. After the police officers Srbslav Mihajlović and Predrag Blagojević had answered in the affirmative, Ražnatović left. Dragoljub Trbić, Đorđe Milovanović, Branko Gojsović and the unidentified older man left the station at the same time.

On the night of 4-5 October, Željko Ražnatović, aka Arkan, several members of the SDG, and Stričević killed at least 26 persons: Ernest Bača (b. 1956), Josip Balog (b.1945), Elvis Hadžić (b.1973), Zvonko Mlinarević (b.1958), Ranko Soldo (b.1947), Franjo Mesarić (b.1953), Mihajlo Šimon (b.1937), Josip Mikec (b.1954), Marin/Marinko Šomodvarac (b.1946), Rudolf Jukić (b.1964), Mihalj Tolaš (b.1934), Pavao/Pavo Šarac (b.1936), Đorđe Radaljević (b.1965), Vinko Oroz (b.1967), Petar/Pero Rašić (b.1946), Janoš Šileš (b.1957), Stanislav Strmečki (b.1974), Ivica Krkalo (b.1958), Tibor Šileš (b.1963), Danijel Tomić (b.1929), Petar/Pero Milić (b.1943), Ileš Lukač (b.1945), Karlo Rač (b.1932), Zlatko Rastija (b.1971) and Ivan Tomić (b.1929).\textsuperscript{90}

The bodies of the killed detainees were thrown into the Danube at a place called Jama. The remains of 23 victims were exhumed in the territory of Vukovar municipality or in Serbia. The cause of death for most victims was a gunshot to the head.\textsuperscript{91}

Matija Hum (b.1942) from Aljmaš was also taken away from the prison in Dalj by members of the SDG in October 1991. His mortal remains were recovered from the Catholic cemetery in Dalj in 1998.\textsuperscript{92}

Tenja

On 11 October 1991, JNA troops came upon a group of ZNG soldiers on the road between Klisa and Tenja. They got into a fight, after which 12 members of the 3rd ZNG Guards Brigade surrendered to the JNA. Shortly afterwards, JNA troops killed the Platoon Commander Vjekoslav Štetka and took the remaining 11 captives towards Klisa. The captives had their hands tied behind their backs, were beaten with batons and subjected to a mock execution. After that, they were divided into two groups.

Six of the captured soldiers were taken first to Bijelo Brdo, and then to Bogojevo and handed over to the 12th Battalion of the Military Police.93

The second group, which included Frano/Franjo Čalušić, nicknamed “Čalton”, Zdenko Bašurić, Željko Hertarić, Darko Popić (b.1962), and Zdenko Stepić, were handed over to the SDG. According to the statement of protected witness C-015, the JNA soldiers handed over the captives to SDG officers Mihajlo Ulemek and Marko Pejić, who drove them in the direction of Erdut.94 According to information obtained by the Security Authority of the 1st Military District (OB of the 1st VO) at the end of 1991, Frano/Franja Čalušić, nicknamed Čalton, was killed by SDG member Bogdan Hajduković, nicknamed “Burence” [Keg], with a pistol to the back of the head.95

Seven days after Čalušić and others were taken away, the OB of the 1st VO reported that 4 corpses had been discovered in the cornfields between the village of Vera and the Marinovci farm and that they belonged to the captured ZNG members. The corpses were reburied on the orders of Željko Čizmić, commander of the police station in Dalj.96

Lužac

In the early morning hours of 1 November 1991, on the orders of the Command of the JNA 12th Corps, joint forces of the JNA, TO and volunteer units, including the SDG, attacked the village of Lužac in order to cut off the ZNG and Croatian MUP forces from Borovo Naselje and Vukovar.97

93 One person from this group was killed on the way from Bijelo Brdo to Bogojevo and the others were taken to camps in Serbia. In 1993, three members of Serbian forces involved in this incident were charged with war crimes against prisoners of war, specifically the torture and killings of prisoners, by the County State Attorney’s Office in Osijek, and tried in absentia. The County Court in Osijek judged Josip Budimčić, Branko Stoisašvlević, and Stevo Stoisašvlević guilty of torture and killings of prisoners, but the Supreme Court of Croatia ordered a retrial. Following the retrial, which was also conducted in the absence of the defendants, the County Court in Osijek in 1996 found Josip Budimčić, Branko Stoisašvlević, and Stevo Stoisašvlević guilty and sentenced them each to 15 years in prison. In 2001, Croatia sought Josip Budimčić’s extradition from Canada. In 2008, Canada refused to surrender him, stating that there was not sufficient evidence that Budimčić had committed a war crime. 96 On 7 December 2022, the HLC submitted a request for information to the Directorate for Detained and Missing Persons of the Croatian Ministry of War Veterans seeking information about the exhumation and identification of the said persons. The Directorate replied on 21 December 2022 that such information could not be disclosed; Information – unlawful killings of captured members of the ZNG and other persons, 18 October 1991, exhibit 00718, Mrkšić et al.

Željko Ražnatović aka Arkan was involved in the planning of the attack on Lužac. In late October 1991, he and Major Milenko Lukić and his soldiers were near Đergaj Forest to reconnoitre the area. Lukić, the Commander of the 2nd Mechanised Battalion of the 51st Mechanised Brigade (2nd Mb of the 51st MBr), was directly in charge of the attack. Before the attack, Arkan and one of the SDG majors attended a meeting held in a school in Bršadin, at which tasks were assigned to the units that were to participate in the attack.98

The attack on Lužac was carried out by parts of the JNA 51st MBr, parts of the Kragujevac Light Infantry Brigade (LPBr), SDG and Bršadin TO.99 During the attack, the SDG was supported by the tank company of the 2nd MB.100

On 31 October 1991, the said units were deployed to the village of Bobota. Early next morning, they passed through Bršadin in armoured vehicles, while Arkan led infantry troops made up of SDG members and armed members of the TO force. In the morning hours of 1 November 1991, the 1st MC of the 2nd MB opened fire from tanks at Lužac to prepare the ground for the SDG attack. Shortly afterwards, they set up a pontoon bridge over the River Vuka and secured it, allowing the infantry units to advance towards Lužac. Later that day, the SDG and JNA units captured Lužac.101

The commander of the 1st MC, Aleksandar Filković, gave a statement to the ICTY Prosecutor’s Office saying that after the capture of Lužac, screams and cries for help could be heard from the village on the night of 1-2 November. He did not leave his position that night, but according to his knowledge, it was women and children crying while being pulled out of their basements in Lužac. The following day, Filković saw Arkan kill an unidentified boy 15-16 years of age who was shouting “Long live Croatia!” as two members of the SDG were bringing him to Arkan.102
At least 17 people, including seven civilians, were killed during the attack on Lužac on 1-2 November 1991.103

Erdut

In the first half of November 1991, members of the SDG and the National Security Council (SNB) of the SAO SBZS forcibly brought several men to the Training Centre, where they were interrogated, beaten and eventually killed. Milorad Strišević interrogated them in the presence of Željko Ražnatović aka Arkan, Stojan Novaković, nicknamed “Cope”, and Nebojša Đorđević, nicknamed Šuca. Two of Arkan's soldiers brought one prisoner at a time for interrogation. The prisoners had to kneel down and put their hands behind their backs. Every time they responded “I don't know”, Šuca would hit them with a baseball bat. Arkan also beat the prisoners.104

On or around 9 November, Josip Bence (b.1925), Palko/Pavao Bereš (b.1927), Antun Kalozi (b.1929), Nikola Kalozi (b.1951), Nikola Kalozi (b.1922), Ivan Mihaljev (b.1955), Franjo Pap (b.1934), Mihajlo Pap (b.1966), Stjepan Sennaši (b.1935) and Josip Sennaši (b.1967) were killed at the Training Centre in Erdut. The mortal remains of nine of the victims were exhumed from the mass grave in Ćelije, and the mortal remains of Franjo Pap were exhumed from a grave in the Dalj agricultural district. The victims had skull fractures, shotgun wounds and head injuries caused by blunt instruments.105

In the days following 9 November 1991, Mihajlo Ulemek, a member of the SDG, came to the National Security Council (SNB) headquarters and demanded that something be done about Juliana Pap, a resident of Erdut, who was inquiring about the fate of her husband Franjo. The next day, Juliana Pap was brought to the police station in Erdut and told to stop asking questions about her husband. A few days later, she was brought in again, after which SNB members took her to her house and told her that she would be able to see her husband if she gave them money. Juliana Pap (b. 1941), her son Franjo Pap (b. 1960) and daughter-in-law Natalija Rakin (b. 1970) gave money to members of the SNB and went with them in the direction of Borovo Selo. Near the Hunting Lodge in Savulja, members of the SNB first killed Julijana Pap and then her son and daughter-in-law on the orders of the head of the SNB, Stevo Bogić, nicknamed “Jajo”, and Mihajlo Ulemek.106 Their bodies were thrown into a nearby well. Their mortal remains were exhumed from a mass grave in Borovo Selo in September 2000.107

On 11 November 1991, seven members of the SDG, including one with the nickname “Crnogorac”, and Milorad Stričević, brought six men from Dalj and Klisa to a house near the Training Centre, where two men from Dalj and Bijelo Brdo were held in detention. Upon arrival, Arkan's soldiers found out that one of the detained men was Serb, Rajko Bursać, and immediately released him. The other detainees were guarded by five SDG members taking turns. They were brought for interrogation one by one, and then taken to the basement where they were beaten by Crnogorac and another SDG member. In the evening, the detainees were transferred to the Training Centre for further interrogation. There was a woman taking notes on the interrogation.

The seven detainees, including Stjepan Dasović, were held in a windowless room with a metal door. Although they did not see other detainees, they heard someone speaking Hungarian. Members of the SDG stood guard in front of the door. Detainees were not allowed to leave the room and food was brought into the room. They had to defecate in a bucket. On the third day of imprisonment, Stjepan Dasović and his brother were released after their relatives from Serbia had interceded on their behalf. The rest of the detainees – Jakob Barbarević (b.1935), Toma Curić (b.1937), Josip Debić (b.1946), Ivan Kučan (b.1947) and Josip Vaniček (b.1951) – were killed at the Centre or in its vicinity after 14 November 1991. Their bodies were later exhumed from the mass grave in Ćelije.

On or around 25 December 1991, members of the SDG and local police force, including Gojko Drinić and Tihomir Ivošević, took several persons of Hungarian and Croatian ethnicity, including women, to the Training Centre for interrogation. The interrogation was conducted by Milorad Stričević. The following day, members of the SDG beat and killed Manda Maj (b.1933) and Josip/Jura Zoretić (b.1951) in the Training Centre. The mortal remains of those killed were found in a mass grave in the Dalj agricultural district.

On 17 March 1992, Željko Ražnatović aka Arkan, accompanied by four men, came to Marija Senaši’s house in Dalj Planina and took away from her the key to the Senaši’s tavern. Her house was repeatedly looted and she was beaten. Senaši sought protection from members of the regular army.\(^{114}\) Around 3 June 1992, Marija Senaši (b.1937) disappeared while cycling to her home in Dalj Planina. On the orders of Mihajlo Ulemek, members of the SNB detained Marija Senaši in the basement of a house at the side of the road linking Erdut and Aljmaš, after which she was killed.\(^{115}\) Her mortal remains were exhumed from a well in Dalj Planina in September 2000.\(^{116}\)

In early April 1992, members of the SDG and a group of armed and uniformed men wearing face masks gathered at least 90 mostly elderly citizens of Croatian and Hungarian ethnicity from Erdut and transported them in two buses to Sarvaš, near the line of contact between Serb and Croat forces. In Sarvaš, people were taken off the bus and told to go on foot towards the Croat soldiers.\(^{117}\)

On the night of 6-7 March 1993, members of the SDG arrested two members of the RSK MUP, two customs officers, a woman employed in the customs service, two members of the SVK and a woman from Erdut in the Training Centre, for allegedly smuggling and selling weapons to members of the Russian Battalion of UNPROFOR. The detainees were held in the Training Centre, where they were interrogated and physically abused, after which they were released. Mihajlo Ulemek was involved in the physical abuse, inflicting serious bodily harm on the detainees.\(^{118}\)

The cover-up of crimes

At the trial of Slobodan Milošević, protected witness B-071 stated that as a member of the SDG labour platoon, he participated in covering up a grave in a well near Erdut in 1996.\(^{119}\) According to his statement, SDG Captain Vlado Vukotić told Captain Svetozar Pejović, nicknamed “Peja”, to find six to ten people for a special task. Pejović then told Radomir Trojanović to get hold of some shovels and pickaxes and that he would take him and the others to perform the task. Upon arriving at the location, Trojanović told the present members of the SDG that they had to cover up the grave and camouflage it so that it could not be seen.\(^{120}\)

According to the statement of protected witness C-015, on an unspecified date in 1995, members of the SDG locked down the village of Tordinci and expelled the Russian Battalion of UNPROFOR, and exhumed approximately 200 bodies from the mass grave and drove them in an unknown direction. Local Serbs also took part in the removal and transfer of the bodies on the orders of Boro Ivanović, Commander of the Novi Sad Corps. Protected witness C-015 stated that they could have been buried at the place called Rupe, near Tordinci.\textsuperscript{121} Three mass graves and a number of single graves have been discovered in the Tordinci area and the mortal remains of 39 people have been exhumed from them. The majority of victims are still unaccounted for.\textsuperscript{122}

Northern Dalmatia

In the second half of January 1993, the SDG engaged in the fighting in Dalmatia. The arrival of the SDG was organized by Milan Milanović, nicknamed “Mrgud” [Grumpy], at the request of Milan Martić, who asked for help from the SAO SBZS authorities after the beginning of the Croatian army’s attack on the area of Ravni Kotari and Maslenica.\textsuperscript{123} Upon arrival in Knin, the SDG refused to be quartered in military barracks, but stayed (more than 500 of them) at the Hotel Asseria in Benkovac.\textsuperscript{124}

On 31 January, the SDG engaged in the attack on Perića glava - the village of Paljuv, and then in the attack on Novigrad, as part of the newly established Operative Group 1.\textsuperscript{125} Over the following month, they participated in battles in Kašić, Mali Alan and Škabrnja.

Initially, the commanders of the military and police units of the RSK reported on the positive effects on the combat morale of the units of the deployment of the SDG to the area,\textsuperscript{126} but very soon they began to report on the problematic behaviour of members of the SDG.

On 12 February 1993, the commander of the Main Staff of the SVK wrote Arkan a letter stating that “it is highly desirable at this moment to remove Colonel Ulemek from Obrovac”, explaining that a part of the SDG led by Mihajlo Ulemek had got entangled in local conflicts in Obrovac, instead of being in... combat operations, which was their main task.\textsuperscript{127} On 20 February, the Security & Intelligence Organ of the SVK Main Staff reported that members of the SDG were not interested in defending the territory, “but in taking Zadar in order to rob local banks and steal gold and foreign currency.”\textsuperscript{128}

The command of the 15th Corps stationed in the Gračac area noted that the situation worsened after around 200 members of the SDG had joined the 9th MtBr. “[T]he presence of Arkan and his fighters, their courage, fortitude, and stamina instil confidence and motivate the combatants on the one hand; but on the other hand, their behaviour, privileges and the fear that they stir up by blatant physical abuse of some fighters and commanding officers, is the source of overt discontent that can result in open conflicts and escalations. A part of the brigade command condones this deviant behaviour, which causes fear of ‘Arkanization’ among the fighters and could have negative consequences.”\textsuperscript{129}

On the orders of the Commander of the Main Staff of the SVK, Mile Novaković, and the Minister of Internal Affairs of the RSK, Milan Martić, on 21 February 1993 Željko Ražnatović Arkan and SDG members were banned from entering the RSK owing to their “misbehaviour in January and February 1993 during the battles in the areas of Benkovac, Obrovac, and Gračac, and mistreatment of the civilian population”.\textsuperscript{130} Although this ban was lifted as early as 27 February, Arkan left Dalmatia. Around 400 members of the SDG remained in the SVK until late March 1993, when they went back to Erdut.\textsuperscript{131}

The Serbian Volunteer Guard in Bosnia and Herzegovina

The SDG arrived in Bosnia and Herzegovina following Radovan Karadžić’s public call for volunteers “in the Serbian countries and all Orthodox countries”. Biljana Plavšić too invited volunteers to come to BiH in a letter addressed to Željko Ražnatović, Vojislav Šešelj, Mirko Jović and others.\textsuperscript{132} In a 1994 interview, Ražnatović said that the SDG had come to BiH at the invitation of the Serbian Democratic Party.\textsuperscript{133} Ljubiša Savić, nicknamed “Mauzer”, the Commander of the Special Brigade of the VRS called

“Panthers Guard”, the Crisis Staff of the town of Bijeljina, and Predrag Ješurić, head of the Bijeljina SUP, also invited the SDG to come and fight in their areas.134

Bijeljina

The SDG first came to the Bijeljina area in March 1992, when they participated in the training of the local population linked to the SDS.135

On the night of 31 March 1992, about 60 members of the SDG were transferred by bus from Erdut to Badovinci, and then by raft ferry to the village of Popovi, where they joined the local forces under the command of Mirko Blagojević and Ljubiša Savić, nicknamed Mauzer, who had previously undergone SDG training.136 Shortly afterwards, they were transferred by bus to a place a kilometre away from the centre of Bijeljina town, from where they set out to capture the town.137

Members of the SDG moved in small groups in order to cross the entire town more quickly. Each group had a local Serb as a guide. Although the poorly armed non-Serb population put up some resistance from the barricades they had previously set up, after six to eight hours members of the SDG and local Serb forces took control of the town and posted a guard in front of the most important institutions in the town, including the hospital which they ransacked.138

After the capture of the town, they hoisted Serbian flags on two town mosques.139 In one of the Bijeljina mosques, armed members of the SDG, including Nebojša Đorđević, nicknamed Šuca, were photographed by photojournalist Ron Haviv, who accompanied a group of SDG fighters on 2 April 1992.140

He was trained by the SDG; Arkan assigned him the rank of colonel, see in: Transcript of a TV interview with Željko Ražnatović, July 1994, exhibit P648.A, Krajišnik, p. 11; Testimony of protected witness B-161 in Milošević, ICTY, 22 May 2003, pp. 21053-21054.

Over the next couple of days, the town was surrounded by armed reserve troops, and “chaos, lawlessness and widespread panic swept the town.”

In the course of the Serb takeover of the town, members of the SDG took people out of their houses, basements and workplaces and brought them to the premises of the Crisis Staff to beat them. They surrounded the bus station and stopped civilians on the street and locked them in the bus station waiting-room. In front of the bus station, three or four members of the SDG shot dead Mića Đokić, nicknamed “Ludi Mićo”, a mentally impaired civilian with a paralysed arm and leg, because he did not stop on their orders.

On April 2, 1992, members of the SDG broke into the basement of the house of the Šabanović family, not far from the mosque and the City Park, where about fifteen people were hiding. They took Redžep Šabanović (1943), his wife Ajša (called “Tifa”), Abduraham (1954), and Hamijeta Pajaziti (1953) out of the basement and killed them. Ajša and Redžep Šabanović’s son, Admir (1968), were killed near the mosque while Admir was running away from the courtyard. Around 13 civilians were killed in the yard of Šabanović’s house and the surrounding area. SDG member Jovan Dimitrijević, testifying before the ICTY, recognised SDG member Srđan Golubović, nicknamed “Max”, as the soldier who was about to kick the body of murdered Ajša Šabanović in a famous photograph by Ron Haviv.

Members of the SDG broke down Rijad Arifović’s basement door and forced his mother and him into the yard. Arifović recognized Brano Filipović, known as “Šumar” [Forester], Miloš Blagojević, and Žika Cvijanović from Bijeljina in the group of Arkan’s men, wearing camouflage uniforms and balaclavas. They searched the house, told Arifović not to leave home, and left. The shooting spree started soon afterwards. Arifović saw the bodies of murdered people lying on the street the whole day and night. Among the bodies left in a yard, he recognized Sabit Arifović (b.1935), Husein Gelja (b.1933) and Majda Halilović. Husein Dizdarević (b.1941), a disabled man, and the brothers Adnan (b.1963) and Rijad Komšić (b.1973) were killed near the library.

In the course of the takeover of Bijeljina, at least 48 civilians between the ages of 10 and 70 were killed. The Bijeljina Crisis Staff published a list of “killed Muslim extremists”, with 40 names.146 Their bodies were later found in 15 locations in Bijeljina.147 Most of the victims were shot in the chest, mouth, temple, or top of the head, some at close range. As ordered by the SDG, the corpses were removed from the streets in anticipation of a visit by Biljana Plavšić, Fikret Abdić and other SDS officials on 4 April 1991. The bodies removed from the streets were taken to the mortuary of the Bijeljina hospital, in front of which members of the SDG stood guard.148

The Command of the JNA 17th Corps, in whose area of responsibility Bijeljina was, reported on 4 April 1992 that the town was under the control of “the SDS and Arkan’s men”.149 On the same day, two members of the SDG, one of whom was known as “Šoša”, and Branko Filipović, nicknamed Šumar, took Asim Fidahić (b.1960) from his home. Fidahić’s mortal remains were later found at the cemetery in Sremska Mitrovica, Serbia.150

Later that day, a delegation that included members of the Presidency of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Biljana Plavšić, Fikret Abdić, Defence Minister Jerko Doko, and JNA generals Dobrašin Praščević and Savo Janković visited Bijeljina.151 General Praščević reported to Arkan and Biljana Plavšić publicly praised him, kissed and thanked him. She then asked him to hand over control of Bijeljina to the JNA, which Arkan refused.152

After 1 April 1992, SDG members took control of the Public Security Station (SJB) and, posing as instructors, freely entered the station and arbitrarily slapped and humiliated police officers. They took official SJB vehicles and weapons seized from the Muslim population without authorisation. They also took documents from the SJB station and forged firearms licences, driver’s and traffic licences for vehicles they had stolen. Police could not patrol Bijeljina unless at least one SDG member was on the patrol.153

By the time a group of inspectors from the Federal Ministry of the Interior had arrived in the Bijeljina area on 27 June 1992, members of the SDG and other units had mistreated and looted the property of the remaining Bijeljina population regardless of their ethnicity. Rapes also took place. The inhabitants were leaving the town under duress.154

A few days after the capture of Bijeljina, some of the SDG members were sent to Zvornik, while some of them joined the unit of Ljubiša Savić, nicknamed Mauzer, under whose command they participated in the capture of Smoluća.155

Janja

After the capture of Bijeljina, SDG members led by Arkan came to Janja and demanded the local Muslim population to surrender their weapons, including hunting rifles, in order for the SDG to guarantee their safety. After the inhabitants of Janja surrendered their weapons, Arkan informed them that the municipality of Bijeljina had come under Serbian control.

Two to three days later, the local police began to wear Republika Srpska insignia. A curfew was issued, telephone lines were disconnected, and residents of Janja were forbidden to leave the village.156

After the capture of Janja, the non-Serb population was harassed, intimidated and subjected to forced labour before gradually being deported or expelled from the village over the next few years. Vojkan Đurković, nicknamed “Puškar”, an SDG officer, played a key role in the deportation and expulsion of the residents of Janja. In 1994, Đurković opened an office in the centre of the village, where the inhabitants of Janja had to register to be able to leave the village in convoys. Đurković charged 200 German marks per family member for registration, and for men of military age the price would go up to 2000 German marks. Several other members of the SDG also participated in the displacement of the population.\textsuperscript{157} Even when their families paid the required sums, men of military age were separated from the convoy and sent to VRS units to be subjected to forced labour.\textsuperscript{158}

Zvornik

In early April 1992, several volunteer units from Serbia came to the Zvornik area. Their arrival was coordinated by the Serbian Municipal Crisis Staff.

The SDG arrived in the area on 4 or 5 April 1992. They first stayed in Radaljska Banja, across the River Drina, in Serbia. On 5 April 1992, Željko Ražnatović authorized SDG officer Marko Pejić, nicknamed Peja, to lead the attack on Zvornik.\textsuperscript{159} On the night of 5-6 April 1992, members of the SDG and other volunteer units from Serbia (“Sima’s Chetniks”, “Yellow Wasps”, “Gogić’s Group”, etc.) with the assistance of the Bosnian Serb police, set up barricades and checkpoints in the direction of Karakaj.\textsuperscript{160} Bosnian Muslims responded by setting up barricades on the bridge between Serbia and Bosnia and Herzegovina.\textsuperscript{161}

On 6 April, the Command of the JNA 17th Corps reported as follows: “The presence of Ražnatović Arkan’s SDG in the area of Semberija does not contribute to calming the situation and improving

\textsuperscript{161} Milorad Ulemek aka Legija was among the volunteers who came to Zvornik from Serbia. He was arrested upon entering the town with a group of volunteers linked to the SRS – brothers Vojin and Duško Vučković and Miroslav Bogdanović, when they took a wrong turning from the road leading from Karakaj to Mali Zvornik on the way to the Hotel Jezero, where they intended to join other volunteers. They were armed with guns, knives, handcuffs and wires. They were detained overnight in the police station. Marko Pavlović/Branko Popović, Commander of the Zvornik TO Staff, sent to Zvornik by Serbian DB, General Savo Jankovic, Commander of the 17th Corps, and KOS General Nedeljko Bošković all demanded that the arrested volunteers be released. Ulemek and the other arrestees, escorted by the head of the criminal police Fadil Mujić, were transferred to the dam in Divič to be exchanged, and there they joined other Serb volunteers in the attack on Zvornik. Vojin Vučković and his brother Dušan soon formed the Yellow Wasps Unit, while Ulemek joined the SDG, see in Notes on the interrogation of accused Vojin Vučković before the District Court in Šabac, 7 November 1993, exhibit P01403, Stanišić & Simatović; Jovan Dimitrijević, witness statement in Stanišić & Simatović, ICTY, 18 January 2012, pp. 16134-16137; Testimony of protected witness B-1237 in Milošević, ICTY, 8 May 2003, pp. 20407-20408; When he arrived in the Zvornik area, Branko Popović identified himself as Marko Pavlović. relations with the Muslims. The situation in the municipality of Zvornik is explosive and can escalate into a large-scale conflict.[162]

On 7 April 1992, a day before the attack on Zvornik, a meeting between SDS, SDA and JNA representatives was held at the Hotel Jezero in Mali Zvornik, at which the partitioning of Zvornik municipality was discussed. Ražnatović also came to the meeting accompanied by several SDG members. He asked Serb representatives from Zvornik “who authorized them to split Serbian land with Muslims”, after which Marko Pejić beat them. Ražnatović gave the Bosnian Muslim representatives an ultimatum to surrender their weapons and hand the town over by eight o’clock next morning.163

The Serb attack on Zvornik led by the SDG commenced in the morning hours of 8 April 1992 and lasted for two days. About 60 SDG members under the command of Major Marko Pejić, nicknamed Peja, about a hundred volunteers, and 100 to 200 members of the TO force and Zvornik SUP participated in the attack.164 Artillery support was provided by the JNA, who shelled Muslim-inhabited parts of Zvornik from the directions of Mali Zvornik, Karakaj and Čelopek.165 Several thousand residents left Zvornik during the first day of the attack. Radio Zvornik urged the inhabitants to take shelter in basements.166

Around eight o’clock in the evening, Serbian forces led by the SDG entered Zvornik. According to the plan, they first took the hospital, then the radio station, and then the SUP. Members of the SDG moved around the town guided by a local resident, who showed them the wealthier Muslim residents.167 The following day, the Serbian TO Staff informed the Federal Defence Secretariat as follows: “At 13.00 hours TO and Serbian volunteer units mopped up two thirds of Zvornik and are advancing along the River Drina towards Divič and Kula (in the Old town). At 13.30 hours, fighting took place around the Zamlaz, Fetija and Cigan mala neighbourhoods. There were killed and wounded in the fighting, but not among our units.”168

On 9 April 1992, about 30 civilians, including women and children, were sheltering in the basement of a multifamily residential building in Filip Kljajić Street in Zvornik. At around ten o’clock in the morning, ten soldiers in black uniforms, balaclavas and black fingerless gloves, breached the basement door using explosives and burst in. They ordered the men to get out, under the pretext that they had to be searched for weapons. Shortly afterwards, they threw the women and children out of the basement and ordered them to move to the SUP building, without turning around and looking at the men who were standing lined up against the wall of the building with their hands on their heads. After walking about two hundred metres, witness B-1058 heard gunshots behind her. When she attempted to turn around, the soldier behind her poked her in the back with his automatic rifle to keep moving without looking back. On the way to the SUP, the witness saw the corpses of her murdered neighbours. The women and children from the basement were taken to the library, across the street from the SUP. Women from other parts of Zvornik were also being brought to the library, and said that they had seen the corpses of murdered men in front of the building in Filip Kljajić Street. In the afternoon, Željko Ražnatović Arkan came to the library and said that buses would come to take them away. A bit later, they were transported in buses to Banja Koviljača, in Serbia. A few days later, witness B-1058 returned to Zvornik to find out what had happened to the corpses of the men killed in front of the building. She saw bullet holes in the wall, blood, bullet casings, her husband’s cap and her son’s sneaker on the asphalt.

At least 12 men were killed in front of the building in Filip Kljajić Street on 9 April 1992: Mevludin Ahmetović (b.1962), Nusret Ahmetović (b.1966), Fahrudin Alajbegović (b.1929), Sabit Bilalić (b.1943), Samir Bilalić (b.1968), Senad Bilalić (b.1970), Hajrudin Delić (b.1946), Edhem Hadžić (b.1930), Sead Hidić (b.1967), Senad Hidić (b.1972), Ivo Kojić, and Dedo Krtičić (b.1933). Witness B-1058 testified that Arkan’s and Šešelj’s men were among the soldiers who took the men out of the basement.

During the takeover of Zvornik, a large number of Muslims were captured and brought by members of different units to the Alhos textile factory in Karakaj, where they were interrogated by Marko Pejić. It is estimated that between 200 and 300 men captured during the takeover of the town were brought to Alhos, where they were tortured and killed.
Pursuant to Pejić’s orders, the corpses of those killed during the takeover of the town were also brought to Alhos. In the first five or six days following the takeover of Zvornik, several dozen corpses were transferred to Alhos.\footnote{Witness statement of protected witness B-1775, ICTY, 29 May 2003, pp. 21320-21322.}

On 10 April 1992, members of the SDG attempted to capture Kula Grad with artillery support from the JNA, but the Bosnian Muslim forces repelled the attacks. Two members of the SDG – Ivan Okiljević, nicknamed “Rambo”, and Branko Živanović, known as “Major Žika” – were killed in the fight.\footnote{Request for support, 17th Corps, 10 April 1992, exhibit D00177; Nedžad Hadžiefendić, witness statement in Karadžić, ICTY, exhibit P00062, p. 3; Report on the state, organisational-formational structure and combat readiness of units of the Armed Forces – Zvornik, exhibit D00038, Karadžić, p. 2; Transcript of a TV interview with Željko Ražnatović, July 1994, exhibit P648.A, Krajišnik, p. 13.}

In late April, members of the SDG participated in a Serb attack on the village of Divič. At least 1000 Muslims fled to the neighbouring village of Jošanica as a result of the attack. The Serbian forces did not allow them to return to the village.\footnote{Testimony of protected witness K in Zvornik I, District Court in Belgrade, 8 May 2006, paras. 1201-1206.}

The SDG pulled out from Zvornik around 25 April 1992, but some SDG members stayed in the area.\footnote{Statement given to the HLC, April 1994.}

In May 1992, led by Pejic, Arkan’s men came to Kozluk. They drove through the neighborhood in a van and, over a megaphone, informed the locals that they must surrender their weapons. They checked every house, took people out, and robbed them. Arkan's men took about twenty people from Kozluk to Alhos. They were released following the intervention of Fadil Banjanovic, the president of the MZ Kozluk.\footnote{An SDG member’s letter to the HLC, 14 November 2019.}

In November 2019, the HLC received a letter from a former SDG member, in which he stated that SDG members Saša Savić, Svetozar Pejović and Mladen Šarac robbed several Muslim families in Zvornik in May 1992 and handed over the loot to Marko Pejić, and that Mladen Šarac and Slaviša, known as “Čile”, raped two Muslim women in Snagovo.\footnote{H.M., statement given to the HLC, April 1994.}

At the meeting that Ratko Mladić held on 30 June 1992 with representatives of the Zvornik Municipal Assembly, Marko Pavlović/Branko Popović, a TO commander who had been sent to Zvornik by the Serbian DB, reported that “the volunteer units led by Arkan and Šešelj did an excellent job”.\footnote{See the Zvornik II Case http://www.hlc-rdc.org/Transkripti/zvornik_2.html}

In November 1995, during the celebration of the Republika Srpska MUP’s patron saint, Arkan was awarded a pistol with an engraving as a token of gratitude for the SDG’s participation in the capture of Zvornik in 1992.\footnote{Borislav Pelević, witness statement in Stanišić & Simatović, ICTY, 24 January 2012, pp. 16351-16352.}
Brčko

In early May 1992, a group of SDG members under the command of Marko Pejić, nicknamed Peja, participated in the capture of Brčko. They stayed in this area for about a month.\(^{184}\)

Members of the SDG, together with other volunteer units, were tasked with guarding around 200 men who had been arrested during the capture of the town and detained in the Hadži Paša Mosque (Old Mosque) in the Kolobara area of Brčko. In the mosque, the detainees were interrogated and beaten. According to the testimony of protected witness J in the Jelisić Case, a soldier, whom he identified by his uniform as one of Arkan’s men, killed Zikret Suljić, nicknamed “Kike” (b.1961) as he attempted to flee.\(^{185}\)

In late September 1992, the intelligence service of the IBK submitted a report to the Main Staff of the VRS on the events in Brčko in May and June, which stated that “[t]he town is thronged with all sorts of ‘patriotic’ individuals, who, under the pretext of being ‘loyal Serbs,’ have actually committed robberies, rape and, as a consequence, murders without justifiable reason. [...] the most conspicuous being Mauzer and Major Gavrilović, with Arkan’s companions guided by Peja and the civilian leadership of Bijeljina. Their genuine desire to help their neighbours in Brčko is beyond question, but the poor organisation as a result of which some individuals got out of control and committed murders is also beyond question.”\(^{186}\)

Sarajevo – Ilidža

Around 12 May 1992, a group of about twenty members of the SDG led by Milorad Ulemek aka Legija, the then captain of the SDG, was deployed to the wider Sarajevo area.\(^{187}\) According to Tomislav Kovač, the then head of police in Ilidža, KOS General Nedeljko Bošković came along with the group. According to Kovač, the group was tasked with establishing special units in the area, but they also participated in combat operations in Kasindolska Street.\(^{188}\)

SDG troops were flown to Sarajevo by helicopters from the Batajnica airport in Serbia. They carried only personal weapons. They landed in the barracks compound in Lukavica, from where they were sent to Ilidža. They stayed briefly in Nedžarići, before being returned to Ilidža, where they lodged at the Hotel Terme. Ulemek regularly reported to the SDG headquarters about the developments in Sarajevo.\(^{189}\)

On 19 May 1992 in Ilidža, Serbian forces stopped a convoy of several thousand women and children who were trying to leave Sarajevo and go to Split in Croatia. On 20 May 1992, Ulemek reported to Arkan that the SDG had participated in stopping the convoy.\(^{190}\) The convoy was held until 21 May, when the people from the convoy were allowed to be evacuated from the Ilidža area under the escort of UNPROFOR, in exchange for deliveries of food to the Viktor Bubanj barracks.\(^{191}\) Ulemek informed Arkan that due to stopping the convoy he came into conflict with Mladić, that their presence is not viewed favorably, and that it would be best for them to return.\(^{192}\)

In the second half of May, two members of the SDG demanded from Milenko Tepavčević, the head of police at the Butmir Prison, which was used as a detention facility for the non-Serb population from the Ilidža area, to hand over control of the prison and SJB to the SDG.\(^{193}\) Tepavčević referred them to Tomislav Kovač, who removed them from Ilidža a few days later. Members of the SDG were returned to Belgrade and then sent back to Erdut.\(^{194}\)

Operation Pauk

In November 1994, the SDG participated in Operation Pauk, a joint operation of the forces of the Republic of Serbian Krajina, Republika Srpska, Serbia and Fikret Abdić, aimed at capturing the town of Velika Kladuša and restoring the self-proclaimed Autonomous Province of Western Bosnia (APZB).\(^{195}\) The joint Operation Pauk involved parts of the 21st Corps and units of the 39th and 15th Corps of the Serbian Army of Krajina (SVK), members of the National Defence Force of the APZB, the SDG, the

Unit for Anti-terrorist Operations (JATD) and the Ministry of the Interior of Serbia, as well as parts of the 1st and 2nd Krajina Corps of the VRS. On two occasions, the Scorpions Unit was also involved in the operation. General Mile Novaković was at the head of the joint command of Operation Pauk.196

At the beginning of November 1994, one group, consisting of about 40 members of the SDG under the command of Milorad Ulemek, was sent to the MUP base in Lipovica Forest, from where they were transferred to the DB camp on Mount Tara. After seven days of training in the camp, they were returned to the Lipovica Forest, where they were supplied with weapons and military equipment, after which they left for Petrova Gora in a convoy of buses and trucks. Two or three days later, they settled in Katinovac. Another group, consisting of about thirty SDG members commanded by Mihajlo Ulemek, arrived in the area in mid-November 1994.197

The SDG was attached to Tactical Group 2 (TG2). The TG2 included about a hundred, members of the SDG and about 1,000 soldiers of the National Defence of Western Bosnia (NOZB) under the command of Milorad Ulemek.198 SDG Colonel Rade Rakonjac served as Ulemek’s deputy during this operation and commanded a support unit. The SDG formed a group in charge of logistics, a military police intervention platoon, and the border police unit headed by Božidar Cakić. Mihajlo Ulemek was in charge of interrogation of prisoners.199

The SDG’s presence in the area of Cazin Krajina was kept secret. Members of the SDG left their personal documents at their headquarters in Belgrade before going on assignment to Cazin Krajina.200
They were not even allowed to admit which unit they belonged to, in case of capture, and were introduced to other units involved in Operation Pauk as members of special police.201 Instead of the usual SDG insignia, they wore red berets with an emblem showing a sword and four Cyrillic “S” framed by the Serbian flag.202 In battles, they wore woollen caps and camouflage hats.203

The first task of the SDG was to provide training for members of NOZB units. It was a sort of basic training, which took place in the Vasilj Gaćeša barracks in Petrinja, Croatia.204 Soon afterwards, the

SDG was deployed in the village of Ahovo and participated in the Velika Kladuša offensive alongside other units engaged in the operation.205

After the capture of Velika Kladuša at the end of 1994, a training centre for NOZB new recruits called „Surovi“ was established, headed by Nenad Bujošević. His deputy was Vladan Panić, nicknamed “Pana”.206 The instructors were Jugoslav Gluščević, Novica Njagojević, Zoran Đorđević, nicknamed “Mali Rambo”, Dejan Gvojić, nicknamed “Srna”, Boris Batez, Slaviša Arsenijević, nicknamed “Valjevac”, and Sergeant Radoš Crepuljarević, nicknamed “Crepulja”.207

The units involved in Operation Pauk detained and mistreated non-Serbs in several detention facilities in the area of Velika Kladuša. Milorad Ulemek and soldiers under his command, including Mihajlo Ulemek, interrogated and mistreated prisoners in the Ponikve and Nepeke camps and in a garage in Trnovi.208 Detainees from the Ponikve camp were forced to dig trenches, while younger women were taken to the territory of the SAO Krajina to clean up after the soldier called Legija. A young prisoner from the Ponikve camp was taken to the River Glinica and forced to collect the fish which soldiers had killed with bombs.209

Former KOS member Slobodan Lazarevic, who was engaged in the exchange of prisoners and corpses in the sector of the SVK 21st Corps, said that on one occasion he asked members of the SDG for corpses for exchange. Svetozar Pejović, the SDG colonel, referred Lazarević to Mladen Šarac, who told him that he had no corpses but could provide them, as he had five prisoners. Lazarevic testified that Šarac ordered those five prisoners killed, after which their bodies were handed over to him.210

Members of the SDG would take leave or otherwise leave the area of Cazin Krajina, but most of the unit commanded by Milorad Ulemek, aka Legija, remained in the area until the beginning of Croatian Operation Storm in August 1995, when they pulled out through Žirovac and Dvor. After his return to Erdut, Ulemek received the rank of SDG general.211

Operation Trnovo/Treskavica

In May 1995, a meeting took place in the office of Radovan Stojićić, the head of the Public Security Department of the Serbian MUP. The meeting was attended by, among others, Željko Ražnatović, commander of the Scorpions Unit, Slobodan Medić, nicknamed "Boca", and Ljubo Milojević, nicknamed "Plavi", on behalf of the Vukovar SUP. Stojićić said that the leadership of Republika Srpska had asked for help and that the SDG, the Scorpions and the MUP of the RSK should help the VRS in Trnovo.

In late June 1995, about 70 members of the SDG under the command of Dragan Petrović, nicknamed "Kajman", were deployed to Mount Jahorina, and then to the area of Treskavica, in Trnovo.

Members of the Unit for Anti-terrorist Operations of the MUP of the Republic of Serbia commanded by Vasilije Mijović, members of the Scorpions Unit, as well as the MUP RSK company known as "Plavi", were also sent to Jahorina. All these units were placed under Mijović’s command and had a joint headquarters in Jahorina.

After arriving in Trnovo, the SDG participated in combat operations alongside the VRS and the units of the MUP of Republika Srpska in charge of securing the Sarajevo-Trnovo-Dobro Polje-Miljevina communication line in the area of responsibility of the Sarajevo-Romanija Corps (SRK) of the VRS. In military and police documents, the SDG was referred to as a unit of the Ministry of the Interior of Serbia.

A group of Tigers, which included Mladen Šarac, Svetozar Pejović, nicknamed "Peja", Jugoslav Simić, Saša Asčerić, and Mihajlo Ražnatović, and members of the police from Eastern Slavonia, were transferred from Erdut to Jahorina in four buses driven by forcibly mobilised refugees brought to the Training Centre.

Among the forcibly mobilised drivers was D.D., a haulier from Šabac. On 26 June 1995, D.D. was tasked with transporting members of the SDG from Erdut to Jahorina. After they arrived in Jahorina, D.D. was placed in a hotel. He drove members of the SDG from Jahorina to Pale whenever necessary until 15 July, when Dragan Petrović, nicknamed “Kajman”, ordered him to transport members of the VRS to Bratunac. The next day, D.D. drove soldiers on the Jahorina-Zvornik-Bratunac-Bjelovac route. From 17 to 19 July, several times a day he drove buses carrying army members and captured Muslims from Bjelovac to Konjević Polje. Simultaneously, executions of Srebrenica Muslims and the search for them are still ongoing in the area of Bratunac and Zvornik municipalities. On 19 July 1995, D.D. returned to Jahorina.219

On 23 July 1995, members of the SDG pulled back from the area of Trnovo and Jahorina and returned to Erdut.220 Witness B-129 told the ICTY Chamber in the trial of Slobodan Milošević that after she had returned to Belgrade, Jugoslav Simić, a member of the SDG, told her that members of the Serbian DB had tortured the Muslims captured in the actions at Treskavica “and then killed them.”221

At the beginning of December 2021, the International Commission on Missing Persons (ICMP) announced that ten victims from Srebrenica, whose remains were exhumed in June 2021 at Dobro Polje, had been positively identified.222

Dobro Polje is situated a few kilometres from Godinske Bare, where members of the Scorpions Unit executed six civilians from Srebrenica in mid-July 1995. Testifying before the ICTY, former Scorpion member Goran Stoparić described the arrival of a bus full of civilians accompanied by members of the Security Service Centre (CSB) of the Trnovo area. CSB members threw the civilians out of the buses and handed them over to the Scorpions, saying that they were distributing the civilians from Srebrenica to be killed in different locations and that that was “their portion of civilians.”223

219 In late June 1995, D.D., a haulier from Šabac was stopped by the police in Belgrade because he was driving a bus with Vukovar registration plates. After checking his ID, the police took him to the fire station in Sremska Mitrovica, where he was told to use his bus to transport conscripts from Serbia to Republika Srpska. D.D. drove two tours of forcibly mobilised refugees to Karakaj, after which they sent him from Sremska Mitrovica to Erdut with the empty bus - Witness D.D., statement given to the HLC on 23 June 1997, HLC Archive; Notes of the interview with D.D., 23 February 2005; Travel order no. 01-057, 23 June to 23 July 1995, HLC Archive.

Banjaluka Operation

In the autumn of 1995, a joint operation of the VRS and the MUP of Republika Srpska was launched aiming to prevent the fall of Banja Luka, strengthen the front line, and defend the corridor between Republika Srpska and Serbia, which covered the areas of Sanski Most, Mrkonjić Grad, Banjaluka, Prijedor and Ključ. The SDG participated in this operation as part of Operative Group 10 (OG-10), alongside units of the VRS and RS MUP.\footnote{Battle order Op. no. 10/95, OG-10 Command, 13 October 1995, 13 October 1995, exhibit 2D00162, \textit{Stanišić & Simatović}.} On 20 September 1995, Deputy Minister of the Interior of Republika Srpska Tomislav Kovač issued an order on the unification of all armed forces in the area of responsibility of the 1st and 2nd Krajina Corps, on the basis of which a Joint Staff comprising VRS and MUP units was established. On behalf of the RS MUP, Kovač appointed Željko Ražnatović Arkan to the staff in charge of Prijedor.\footnote{RS MUP Bijeljina no. During the Banjaluka operation, Mihajlo Ulemek was appointed commander of the SDG military police department. Saša Ašćerić, nicknamed “Asteriks”, Mladen Šarac, Rade Rakonjac, Renad Bujošević, Momir Ristić, Mihajlo Ražnatović, Boris Batez, Dragan Petrović, nicknamed “Kajman”, and other SDG members participated in this operation.\footnote{Trial Chamber Judgment in \textit{Stanišić & Simatović}, ICTY, 30 May 2013, para. 1863; Witness L.D., statement given to the HLC in September 1998; Trial Chamber Judgment in \textit{Stanišić & Simatović}, MICT, 30 June 2021, para. 453.}

Sanski Most

In mid-September 1995, between 250 and 300 SDG members were transferred in five or six buses from the Erdut Training Centre to the Hotel Sanus in Sanski Most. In addition to regular members of the SDG, this group also included a large number of refugees who had been forcibly mobilised in Serbia and transferred to the Erdut Centre. Members of the SDG set up a base in the hotel and went to their posts from there. As early as 22 September, Sanski Most was controlled by a large number of soldiers in SDG uniforms.\footnote{Witness V.J., statement given to the HLC on 17 December 1998, HLC Archive; Witness M.J., statement given to the HLC on 21 December 1998, HLC Archive; Witness S.Z., statement given to the HLC on 29 May 1998, HLC Archive; Witness S.K., statement given to the HLC on 7 July 1998, HLC Archive; Video footage - Arkan in Sanski Most, exhibit P02492, \textit{Stanišić & Simatović}; Excerpt from Ratko Mladić’s notebook, 22 September 1992, exhibit P02543, \textit{Stanišić & Simatović}, pp. 3-5.}
Members of the SDG arrested non-Serbs from the area of Sanski Most and detained them in the Hotel Sanus, where they shaved their heads and beat them. They tied them to a post in front of the town art gallery, across the street from the hotel.\(^{230}\) In the boiler room of the hotel, of approximately five square metres in size, members of the SDG imprisoned about 35 Muslim captives, and beat and otherwise mistreated them. Due to the lack of food and water, at least two people died in the boiler room.\(^{231}\) Members of the SDG took jewellery, watches and other valuables from the detainees and handed them over to the War Presidency of Sanski Most.\(^{232}\)

SDG members also brought local Serbs whom they considered deserters to the Hotel Sanus, cut their hair and then sent them on to battlefield positions.\(^{233}\)

The Main Staff of the VRS had information about the violent behaviour of the SDG in the Sanski Most area. In a 23 September 1995 dispatch from the Main Staff of the VRS, it was stated that members of the SDG were forcibly taking away and arresting members of the VRS, disarming parts of the units and appropriating their weapons and equipment, as well as mistreating non-Serb members of the VRS. The dispatch further stated that “the presence of Arkan's paramilitary units precipitated armed clashes and incidents with individuals and some VRS units, and upset the population at large after word got out that he had arrested all the Muslims in Sanski Most and liquidated a certain number of loyal Muslim citizens, including family members of some VRS servicemen, justifying it publicly as liquidation of an infiltrated DTG /Sabotage Group/ in Grdanovci village.”\(^{234}\)

A month later, on 20 October 1995, the Main Staff of the VRS reported to Radovan Karadžić that, up to that date, “11 murders of non-Serbs in Sanski Most and the murder of a VRS member at a position near Novi Grad at the hands of members of the SDG” had been registered.\(^{235}\)

Trnava

On 20 September 1995, members of the SDG killed 11 non-Serb men in the village of Trnava, about 5 km from Sanski Most.

In September 1995, the Army of BiH launched an offensive operation, which forced the VRS to pull back from the front line in Bihać towards Sanski Most on 13 September. A part of the VRS units from Ključ was stationed in the village of Poljak after the retreat. Members of the SDG came to Poljak and asked for men to load weapons and ammunition from the village warehouse onto a truck and then unload the truck outside the Hotel Sanus. Members of the VRS designated five Muslims who were under a work obligation to perform the task.\textsuperscript{236}

The Muslims, escorted by SDG and VRS members, were sent first to the warehouse in Poljak, and then to the Hotel Sanus. When they arrived in Sanski Most, they could see tanks, transporters, mortars, and buses marked Vukovar, as well as captured civilians in front of the hotel. About thirty SDG members in uniform, with black woollen caps or berets - black or red depending on their rank - were also there. The Muslims were ordered to unload the weapons and ammunition only after Arkan’s arrival. After they had unloaded the weapons and ammunition, Arkan approached them, asked for their names, and ordered them to remain in the hotel corridor until further orders. Another member of the SDG, whom the others addressed as colonel or lieutenant colonel, ordered them to sit down and bow their heads almost to the ground, and ordered another soldier to hold them at gunpoint and shoot if they moved. After a while, seven more captured Muslims were brought into the corridor.\textsuperscript{237}

Around half-past two in the morning of 20 September 1995, members of the SDG ordered the prisoners to unload another truck, which carried SDS documentation from Sanski Most, after which they handcuffed all 12 prisoners (they were handcuffed together two-by-two) and ordered them onto a truck covered with a tarpaulin. Three members of the SDG, including a minor called Željo, guarded the prisoners under the tarpaulin. After a 15-minute to half-hour’s drive, the truck stopped in the village of Trnova. Three SDG members ordered the prisoners to get off the truck two-by-two. As the paired up prisoners were getting off the truck, shots were heard. One of the prisoners asked the soldiers if there was a chance for them not to be killed, to which the soldiers said that they would spare their lives if they gave them 5,000 German marks, adding that they were lucky to have been captured by Arkan’s soldiers. In a garage in the village of Trnova, all the prisoners but one were shot dead by members of the SDG. Two of the prisoners were butchered by an SDG member known as Željo. In the end, one of the SDG members ordered another one to shoot each prisoner in the head to finish them off. After that they left the scene.\textsuperscript{238}

Nijaz Topalović (b.1948), and Hasan Topić (b.1941). One prisoner was seriously wounded. The bodies of the killed prisoners were found in October 1995, after the Army of BiH entered Trnova.

Sasina

On or about 21 September 1995, after midnight, members of the SDG forced 67 non-Serbs – 66 men and one woman - from Šehovac, Saki Most and Pobriježe, to board a bus in the parking lot outside the Hotel Sanus. On the way to the bus, the people were forced to walk between two rows of SDG members who beat them with rifle butts and sticks as they passed through. In front of the bus, SDG members beat an elderly man, after which they put him on the bus. Approximately 8 members of the SDG also boarded the crammed bus. Munevera Alagić was the only woman on the bus. Several members of the SDG came to the place where she was sitting and raped her one by one over a period of some 10 to 15 minutes. During that time, other members of the SDG forced the captives to sing Chetnik songs.

Soon afterwards, the bus departed from the parking lot. The prisoners were not allowed to look out of the window and did not know in which direction they were moving. After less than half an hour, the bus stopped outside the town. The music on the bus was turned up, and SDG members began to take the prisoners out of the bus in groups of four or five. The first group was taken out onto the road, which was lit by the bus headlights. A member of the SDG pulled out a knife and killed the first man. The next man was ordered to kneel down with his back to a SDG member, after which he was shot in the back of the head. Two persons survived the killing and testified at the trial of Stanišić and Simatović. They said that shortly after the killing, they heard a vehicle coming, from which two more people were thrown to the edge of the pit into which the bodies of the people killed were being thrown. Then they heard gunshots and two explosions, whereupon the soldiers left the scene. Soon, a bulldozer came to cover the pit containing the bodies with earth.

At least 65 people were killed in Sasina. They were: Senad Aganović (b.1954), Fevzija Alagić (b.1932), Munevera Alagić (b.1953), Remzija Alagić (b.1932), Kadir Alibabić (b.1936), Osman Arapović (b.1939), Mehmedalija Bajrić (b.1959), Senad Bajrić (b.1976), Meho Bajrović (b.1947), Hajrudin Behar (b.1968), Elvir Behremović (b.1970), Ibrahim Behremović (b.1934), Jahija Bešić (b.1928), Muharem Botonjić (b.1922), Drago Buha (b.1972), Derviš Cerić (b.1934), Eniz Cerić (b.1939), Irfan Čekić (b.1928), Aziz Dautović (b.1957), Ermin Drobić (b.1976), Ibrahim Drobić

On 18 and 19 July 1996, two mass graves in Sasina were exhumed, and it was determined that the victims died as a result of wounds caused by firearms fired at close range, except for two victims who died from injuries caused by a knife and a blunt instrument.244

Čađavica

On 3 October 1995, members of the SDG captured three unidentified soldiers of the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina in Mala Manjača, near Mrkonjić Grad. One of them was stripped to his underwear by a member of the SDG nicknamed “Gliša”, who hit him with a rifle-butt and finally stuck a bayonet in his back. The other two were taken to the hamlet of Perići in the village of Čađavica, in Ključ municipality. The next day, Arkan came to Perići and shot one of them in the head with a pistol.245

Forcible return of refugees to the front lines

In August 1995, the Serbian Ministry of the Interior carried out an extensive arrest operation against refugees who had fled Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina. Following a brief detention in police and fire stations throughout Serbia, the refugees were handed over to the military, police and paramilitary units of the RS and RSK, including the SDG. From the beginning of August to the end of September 1995, the Serbian Ministry of the Interior handed over about 5,000 refugees to the SDG.246

After arrival at the Training Centre in Erdut, the refugees had to hand over all their personal belongings to members of the SDG and were then taken to have their heads shaved. All refugees underwent training that lasted from a few days to three weeks, and consisted of strenuous physical exercises and instruction on how to use firearms. Members of the SDG would swear at and otherwise insult the refugees, calling them “traitors” and “cowards”. The refugees were severely punished for every mistake by having to run around carrying a heavy stone, and being tied to poles and there beaten with a stick.247

After the training, members of the SDG would split the refugees into two groups: men of up to 35 years of age and those over 35. Refugees who were elderly or in poor health were assigned to the labour platoon, while men from the first group, after completing the training at the camp, were sent to SVK positions in Eastern Slavonia and Baranja, but also to VRS positions in Bosnia and Herzegovina.248

In September 1995, the SDG took control of the Manjača Training Centre (NDC), i.e., the VRS training centre on Mount Manjača. Forcibly mobilised refugees were also brought to this centre, which was under the command of SDG Major Mladen Šarac. As in Erdut, the refugees had their heads shaved and were stripped of their identity documents and personal belongings. After a short, basic infantry training, they were sent to battlefields throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina to fight as part of various units of the VRS. In early October 1995, the then Minister of the Interior of Republika Srpska, Tomislav Kovač, ordered the SDG to arrest deserters from the front line in the area of Prijedor, “to put them in check and send them back to their home brigades”. The President of Republika Srpska, Radovan Karadžić, authorised the SDG to arrest and train deserters from the VRS.249

249 Ibid, pp. 41-45.
The SDG would also bring members of regular VRS units, even officers who were on leave, to the Manjača Centre, which brought them into conflict with the VRS top brass. Following an intervention of the Commander of the General Staff of the VRS, Ratko Mladić, at the end of October, the SDG was removed from the Manjača Training Centre and, soon afterwards, from Bosnia and Herzegovina as well.

Looting was a hallmark of all the SDG’s activities.

The SDG looted the property of the residents of the SBZS and transferred it to Serbia without let or hindrance. Since arriving in this area, and especially after November 1995 and the signing of the Dayton Peace Agreement, members of the SDG had been involved in logging and timber trafficking. The timber was exported to Italy via Serbia. They were also involved in petrol smuggling from Deletovci, and cigarette smuggling operations. In early October 1991 in Baranja, members of the SDG hijacked a truck carrying leather jackets. The jackets were sold and Ražnatović gave the truck to Pavle Milovanović, nicknamed Paja, the Commander of the Dalj TO. Ražnatović also transferred about 50 luxury vehicles from the SBZS to Serbia and stored them in the Boleč area near Belgrade. He set up weapons depots in Belgrade and its surroundings.

On the first day of the attack on Bijeljina, members of the SDG hijacked around 40 vehicles, including a bus and a fire engine. Later that day, all the vehicles were transferred to Erdut, together with cigarette boxes, washing powder and various technical devices. Over the following days, the SDG and other Serbian forces plundered an iron and steel factory, the Kurjak textile factory, the Zenit shoe factory, a department store, and various shops.

251 General Manojlo Milovanović, former Chief of GŠ VRS stated: “The characteristic of the Serbian Volunteer Guard was that every time they returned from Republika Srpska and Republic of Serbian Krajina it was in convoys consisting not only of transporters and tanks but also of a large number of trailer trucks. It was all about looting” - see in: Transcript of Part One of the documentary The Unit, exhibit P02976.B, Stanišić & Simatović, p. 19; Manojlo Milovanović, witness statement in Stanišić & Simatović, ICTY, 23 April 2010, pp. 4373-4375.

According to the notes of the session of the National Assembly of Republika Srpska held in May 1993, “one of Arkan’s men comes and steals machines from the Koraj textile factory worth several million German marks - 5-6 million German marks, in my estimation. His army steals parts of a dryer and a telephone switchboard worth 2 million German marks.”

When withdrawing from a war zone, members of the SDG carried with them the weapons and equipment they had captured.

VI

Disbanding of the Serbian Volunteer Guard

The SDG was disbanded in March 1996, when it finally left the Training Centre in Erdut. Senior officers, such as Milorad Ulemek, aka Legija, and Nenad Bujošević, aka Rambo, joined the Special Operations Unit of the Serbian MUP RDB. Some of its members joined the Scorpions while this unit was engaged in petrol exploitation in Deletovci. Some were employed by Željko Ražnatović Arkan for his firms in Serbia.

At a farewell ceremony for the SDG in late October 1995 in Bijeljina, RS President Radovan Karadžić presented an award to the SDG and its commander Željko Ražnatović, aka Arkan, for their contribution to war operations in RS. The following year, Karadžić awarded Ražnatović with the Order of Karadorđe’s Star for “outstanding success in commanding and leading units of the armed forces of Republika Srpska in armed combat.”

About thirty members of the SDG were involved in the armed conflict in Kosovo as part of the RDB forces of the Serbian MUP. They had a base at the Grand Hotel in Priština for a while, and a centre for the reception and training of volunteers in Kosovo Polje. In mid-May 1999, Head of the RDB Radomir Marković ordered the Tigers to leave Kosovo Polje after the murder of an elderly couple. Witnesses in the case against Vlastimir Đorđević testified before the ICTY to their having seen members of the SDG, or people wearing a uniform similar to that worn by the SDG, in the area between Orahovac and Đakovica, and then in Srbica, in Priština, Meja, around the village of Vladovo and in the municipality of Kačanik. In the judgment against Đorđević, it is stated that the Chamber “is satisfied from the evidence as a whole that Arkan’s Tigers were present in Kosovo during the Indictment period, were associated with the RDB, and played an active part in the joint operations of the MUP and VJ”.

During the conflicts in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and Kosovo, more than 50 SDG members were killed and around 380 were wounded.

Željko Ražnatović, aka Arkan

Željko Ražnatović, also known as Arkan (1952-2000), was born in Brežice, Slovenia, and killed on 15 January 2000 in the lobby of the Intercontinental Hotel in Belgrade. As a minor, he was arrested for theft and rape. He was repeatedly sentenced for robbery, and in 1973 he escaped from the prison in Padinska Skela. He was arrested for robberies in Sweden, Belgium and the Netherlands. He escaped from prisons in Belgium and the Netherlands.

In the early 1980s, Ražnatović returned to Yugoslavia. During that period, he was arrested several times for injuring police officers in Belgrade and Sweden and for inflicting serious physical injuries on a Belgrade citizen. But he would be released very quickly, which was explained by the connections he had in the Federal Secretariat of the Interior. At one trial, Ražnatović said that he was an employee of the Federal SUP, which the Federal SUP denied; but Arkan produced a document showing that he had received a loan from the Federal SUP for the renovation of his house in Ljutice Bogdana Street.

Towards the end of November 1990, Željko Ražnatović, Dušan Bandić, Zoran Stevanović and Dušan Carić were arrested in Dvor na Uni, Croatia, after the police found several pistols, hand grenades, and Heckler und Koch MP-5K submachine guns, which were prohibited for civilians, in their all-terrain vehicle. The group was charged with plotting against the existing social and state order of the SFRY and the democratic order in the Republic of Croatia. Commenting on the arrest in Dvor na Uni, Arkan later said that they had gone there to take over the police station, capture the special forces sent from Zagreb and establish Serbian authority in the area.

In mid-June 1991, Ražnatović was sentenced to 20 months in prison. On the same day, a decision was made to release the convicts until the verdict become final.267

Ražnatović served as a deputy in the Serbian National Assembly in 1992/1993, as an independent candidate of a group of citizens from Kosovo. In November 1993, he formed the Party of Serbian Unity.268

(Non)prosecution

In 1997, the ICTY filed an indictment against Željko Ražnatović, aka Arkan, but the general public did not learn about the existence of the indictment until March 1999. The content of the indictment had been kept confidential until 2001, when the ICTY decided to vacate the non-disclosure order for it. The indictment charged Arkan with crimes committed in September 1995 in the area of Sanski Most, where "soldiers under his command imprisoned, beat, raped, and executed non-Serb persons."269

In February 2010, Vojislav Šešelj filed a criminal complaint against Borislav Pelević for crimes committed in several locations in Baranja, as well as for crimes in Bijeljina and Zvornik. The filing of the criminal complaint was driven by the political conflict between Šešelj’s SRS and the SNS, of which Pelević was an official. About just twenty days later, the Serbian Office of the War Crimes Prosecutor (OWCP) announced that it had dismissed the criminal charges against Borislav Pelević.270

In October 2011, the HLC filed criminal charges against several persons, including several members of the SDG, for crimes committed in Tenja.271 Although the OWCP in 2010 and 2012 raised indictments for crimes committed in Tenja, there were no members of the SDG among the accused.272

In 2015, Alma Pečković filed a criminal complaint against an unknown person for the murder of her parents Ajša and Režepa and brother Admir Šabanović in Bijeljina.273 In early 2016, the OWCP announced an investigation into the SDG. In November 2021, the HLC sought information about the investigation from the OWCP - whether the investigation had been launched, which persons were under investigation, and for which crimes. In its response, the OWCP stated that it had issued an order to conduct an investigation against unidentified members of the SDG for a war crime in connection with the events in Bijeljina during April 1992.274

Notwithstanding the indictment against Ražnatović and a wealth of evidence against the SDG presented in the proceedings before the ICTY and MICT, especially in the cases of Stanišić & Simatović and Hadžić and Milošević, as well as the facts established in the judgments, according to which Željko Ražnatović Arkan and the SDG were involved in killings, persecution and forcible transfer of people on the territory of the SAO SBZS in 1991 and 1992, as well as in the persecution and killings committed in Bijeljina and Zvornik in 1992 and in Sanski Most in 1995, no member of the SDG has been prosecuted for war crimes to date.275

275 Trial Chamber Judgment in Stanišić & Simatović, MICT, 30 June 2021, para. 442; Although media reports often state that Boban Arsić was the only member of the SDG to be tried in absentia before the County Court in Split, Croatia, for the murders committed in January 1992 in the hamlet of Bačići, in Drinovci village, in the municipality of Drniš, there is no evidence that he was a member of the SDG. Namely, in the judgment Arsić is referred to as a volunteer of the “Serbian Guard from FR Yugoslavia that was part of the so-called Territorial Defence Force in Drniš under the single command of the so-called JNA.” In addition, there is no information that members of the SDG were deployed in the area of Drniš in January 1992. Compiled at Dalj Police Station regarding incidents on the premises of the police station on 4/5 October 1991.

In an interview conducted with Dalj Police Station officers Rajko MILANOVIĆ, Savo STANOJEVIĆ, Blagoje STANOJEVIĆ, Đorde RADIVOJEVIĆ, Predrag BLAGOJEVIĆ and Srbslav MIHALJEVIĆ, the following information was obtained:

At around 2100 hours on 4 October 1991, Milorad STRIČEVIĆ, Chief of Security at the Dalj Defence Staff, together with Dragoljub TRBIĆ, Đorde MILOVANOVIĆ, Branko GOJSOVIĆ and an older, unknown man, came to the premises of Dalj Police Station. Milorad STRIČEVIĆ said that he was going to conduct interviews with detainees from Baranja and Eastern Slavonia. He began conducting the interviews, and at around 2115 hours the Dalj Defence Commander Pavle MILOVANOVIĆ and his deputy Đuro ZMIJANJAC arrived and told them that they were visiting to see what they were doing and whether there were any problems. They then went into the room with STRIČEVIĆ and the others and remained in there for a few minutes and then left. In the period up to 2345 hours, on one occasion there was a telephone call for Milorad STRIČEVIĆ, and after that there were three calls from the Staff asking whether the contact had arrived, with no further explanation.

At around 2345 hours, Željko RAŽNIATOVIĆ aka Arkan and some 20 of his men arrived in a TAM 110 (military) truck, a Pinzgauer and a Jeep. Upon getting out of the vehicles, Arkan’s men – who were armed – cocked their weapons and took up positions around the building of the police station. Arkan came into the station, introduced himself and said that he was the TO /Territorial Defence/ commander and was looking for Milorad, after which he and five of his men went into the room where Milorad STRIČEVIĆ was. When Arkan went into the room, TRBIĆ, MILOVANOVIĆ, GOJSOVIĆ and the unknown man came out, and remained in front of the police station the whole time. STRIČEVIĆ and the others who were in the room brought detainees in through the side door and conducted processing. Throughout the processing Arkan’s men were coming out and others were going in. The only thing that was heard during the interrogations were the words: “Come on you, the Guardsman and MUP /Ministry of the Interior/ guy”, and occasionally sounds were heard as if an object was being struck against a table, but no other sounds were heard. At around 0040 hours they took three detainees who then carried out 12 dead bodies from the room, loaded them into the truck, and then together with those three men drove them off somewhere. After that Arkan returned with his men and asked Srbošlav MIHALJEVIĆ or Predrag BLAGOJEVIĆ whether the room was clean, and when he received an affirmative answer they left. STRIČEVIĆ, MILOVANOVIĆ, GOJSOVIĆ, TRBIĆ and the unknown man also left at the same time.

It has been established that Zvonko MLINAREVIĆ, /Ivan/ TOMIĆ, Josip /LOG, Zlatko /OSTIKA, Josip /NIKIĆ, Rudolf JUKIĆ, Vinko /ROZ, Pero /illegible/, Janoš /INAŠ, Stanislav STRMEĆ, Ivica KRKALO, Tibor /ILEŠ, Danijel TOMIČIĆ, Martin BENKOVIĆ, and Mile GRMAŠIĆ are missing from /the/ detention /unit/.

REPORT

Unauthorised killings of arrested ZNG /National Guard Corps/ members and other individuals.

SP no.35-14984

18.10.1991. ___ year/

On 18.10.1991, in a conversation with an OB source we were given information indicating that RAŽNJATOVIĆ aka ARKAN and the Special Police in Dalj commanded by STRICIEVIĆ MILORAD1 are committing unauthorised killings of the arrested ZNG members, arresting Croatian individuals and committing certain acts against the same.

1 Born in the year /illegible/ in Osijek, ethnic Serb, several times charged with having committed both minor and serious offences, introduces himself as "Colonel" and "Staljin".
The source said that recently four dead bodies of the former ZNG members were found in a cornfield somewhere between the village of Vera and the "Marinovci" farm. They were probably killed by aka Arkan and his men after they had taken over the prisoners from the village of Tenja Police (p.o. /expansion unknown/ the group in question are 11 arrested ZNG members of whom /illegible/ were taken to 12 bvp /Bomber Regiment/).

At the intervention of Željko ĆIZMIĆ, the Commander of Dalj Police Force, the dead bodies were buried by the local prison inmates.

Milorad STRIČEVIĆ, a self-proclaimed "colonel" commanding the "special police" with the assistance of aka Arkan, is in charge of arrests, questionings and pronouncing "judgements". Recently, STRIČEVIĆ wilfully ordained himself with the rank of /illegible/ colonel and that is how he introduces himself when he questions the arrested individuals. It is not a rare incident that some individuals die during the questioning, as a result of being beaten and physically assaulted. These incidents are approved and tolerated by STRIČEVIĆ and they take place in his office. With regard to this, our source gave an example of the killing of an individual from the village of Bogdanovci.

Having arrested, questioned and threatened to kill Stjepan PAP, STRIČEVIĆ forcefully displaced him from Dalj. He had also previously taken his car away, which he is using for his personal needs. On that occasion, Stjepan's wife was kept in STRIČEVIĆ's house and then released.

According to the source, after the organs of the "new government" had been established in Dalj, various "cases" /illegible/ a large number of arrested people were killed and their dead bodies were thrown into the Danube. Some of these bodies turn up /illegible/ near the park in Dalj on a daily basis.

CHIEF
Major General
Mile BABIĆ
/signed and stamped/
VRS GŠ
Strictly confidential no. 6/1-7
23 September 1995

To: The President of RS
RS Ministry of the Interior

There are formations of the SDG (Serbian Volunteer Guard) known as "Tigrovī" /Tigers/, under the command of Željko RAŽNJATOVIĆ aka Arkan in the zone of responsibility /zdo/ of the 1. I./ 1st Battalion of the 1st Brigade of the 2KK /2nd Krajina Corps/. Since so far these formations have not taken part in h/d /combat activities/ and are not a part of any formation unit and have not reported to any command from the level of Battalion to the VRS GŠ to be given an assignment, obviously they are paramilitary formations acting independently of the VRS.

RAŽNJATOVIĆ’s appearances at command posts in the zdo of some units have so far had as their purpose bullying, mistreatment and physical abuse of officers, kidnapping and taking away members of units, disarming parts of units for the purpose of confiscating materiel and technical equipment /MTS/ and combat hardware, unauthorised opening of gunfire on members of the VRS, tearing up official and identification documents of VRS members, arresting and abusing non-Serbs, etc. Željko RAŽNJATOVIĆ aka Arkan has been showing an enactment or decision from the President of RS, Dr. Radovan KARADŽIĆ, by which he has been empowered to "bring in, question, incarcerate and escort all men fit for the military except for Assembly Deputies and members of the RS MUP, which in practice has been limited to abuse of VRS members, especially high-ranking officers.

Members of the SDG paramilitary units forcibly induct into their ranks or recruit VRS members promising them a salary of 600 dinars, 10,000 dinars compensation if they are wounded, unemployment and health insurance through the MUP of the Republic of Serbia. The official media of RS have called on men fit for the military to join the Tigrovī SDG paramilitary units, which is contrary to the RS laws on defence and the military. The impossibility of /properly/ financing VRS combat units has contributed to breaking the unity of VRS combat units, especially those consisting of young soldiers belonging to special units, which may have unforeseeable consequences for the defence of the Republic.

The presence of Arkan’s paramilitary units precipitated armed clashes and incidents with individuals and some VRS units, and upset the population at large after word got out that he arrested all the Muslims in Sanski Most and liquidated a certain number of loyal Muslim citizens, including family members of some VRS servicemen, justifying it publicly as liquidation of an infiltrated DTG /Sabotage Group/ in Grdanoveci village. /Keeping this in mind/ to prevent any further unwanted consequences and armed clashes between the paramilitary formations and VRS units, I hereby request and propose the following:

1. The President of RS should revoke his decision that gave Željko RAŽNJATOVIĆ the power to make arrests, mistreat, disarm and take away VRS members and civilians with his paramilitary units including /his authority/ to use firearms on persons who oppose or resist him.
2. Organs of the MUP should take measures within their jurisdiction against RAŽNJATOVIĆ and his formations for the crimes they committed against VRS members and civilians, because he has identified himself as member of the MUP of Serbia and RS.

3. Željko RAŽNJATOVIĆ aka Arkan and his paramilitary units should be expelled from RS for their bullying of RS members and civilians.

4. If the competent state organs who engaged Željko RAŽNJATOVIĆ to carry out unlawful activities fail to take steps within their jurisdiction, then VRS units shall carry out the order of the President of RS on disarming paramilitary units that are not under the specific command of the VRS GŠ.
